I did not have the option to say no, India added, noting collateral often meant handing over damaging information about one's family. Saying no meant hurting my family or hurting my friends. And I wasn't gonna do that.

 India also recalled the initiation ceremony into DOS where she was unknowingly branded with Raniere's initials.

 We were told that it was a symbol of the elements and that this was gonna be a bonding experience, she said explained. And we were sleep-deprived. We were starved. We were coerced.

 India also spoke with People ahead of the upcoming STARZ documentary Seduced: Inside the NXIVM Cult and gave more disturbing details about that night in January 2016.

 I had two women holding my hands and my feet so I wouldn't convulse, India told the magazine. I remember the smell of flesh.

 India's famous mother helped blow the lid off NXIVM by going public in 2017 as she fought to save her daughter.

 I was scared to death but it didn't matter if I was scared, Catherine told the magazine. I knew what I was up against. I knew nobody had dared to do what I was doing because this cult had financially ruined them.

 India added, I can't describe in words how grateful I am for that. Because the truth is, I didn't see a future for myself when I was there. I was really kind of committed to being there forever, indefinitely.
