The NFC East&#65533;s cross-conference opponent
Posted by alisawhite123 - 2020/10/21 14:18
_____

We&#65533;re six weeks into this NFL season. We&#65533;ve seen enough so far to start making some broad-strokes judgments, analyses that rely on data rather than gut feelings. And it&#65533;s in that spirit that I offer this utterly logical take:
It&#65533;s time to fire the entire NFC East into the sun.
No, I&#65533;m serious. Pack &#65533;em all in. Dallas, Philly, the Giants, Washington &#65533; load &#65533;em up and shoot &#65533;em into orbit. Forfeit all the rest of their games &#65533; it&#65533;s not like they were going to win much of them anyway &#65533; and give their playoff spot to, I don&#65533;t know, Alabama or something.
This is a division that&#65533;s incompetent (New York), infuriating (Washington), indecisive (Phiiladelphia) and incomprehensible (Dallas). New York appears utterly directionless; Washington is just a swampy mess that not even Ron Rivera can clean up; Philadelphia has suffered through decimating injuries; and Dallas clearly lost its heart and soul when it lost Dak Prescott. All four teams combined have five wins. That&#65533;s the same as the Seahawks, Bears, Steelers, Ravens, Titans and Chiefs. Again: the Chicago Bears have won as many games this year as the entire NFC East.

The division is a combined 5-18-1. To get the division above. 500, every single member of the NFC East would have to win every single game from now to Week 11, in mid-December.

Outside the division, the NFC East teams have only two wins: Dallas over Atlanta, which was a gift from the Falcons, and Philly with a five-point victory over San Francisco, which is 3-3 on the season. Yes, the best opponent anyone in the division has beaten doesn&#65533;t even have a winning record.

The NFC East is the only division in football that is completely underwater &#65533; in other words, every team has totaled fewer points on the year than their opponents. The average point differential across the division for the season is -46. The Eagles are the &#65533;best&#65533; of this bunch, and even they have scored 34 fewer points than their opponents.

 shopusacigarettes.com]Online Cigarettes Store USA

==========

