ex-police officer who seem to killed an disarmed Black man in his Dallas apartment includes filed an appeal on her behalf conviction.  On Sept 6, 2018, Silpada Guyger shot plus killed 26-year-old Botham Jean. While in the 2019 trial, Guyger's attorneys asserted that she parked to the wrong floor with her building searching for long shift on the job and mistakenly got into the apartment above her very own.  Insider previously reported anytime Guyger walked on the wrong apartment the woman saw the silhouette on the figure standing at night and said "Let me see the hands! " before taking her firearm.  Prosecutors compared with that argument, saying Jean wasn't a threat when he was watching tv and eating your bowl of ice-cubes cream when Guyger got into his Dallas flat.  Ultimately, she was determined guilty of Jean's hard and sentenced to few years in prison around October 2019.
While in the appeal, Guyger is inquiring to either be acquitted of your murder charge and also acquitted and costed with criminally negligent murder, a lesser felony. Guyger's lawyers said the fact that evidence was "legally not sufficient to prove above reasonable doubt, inches CBS reported.  "Her incorrect belief negated a culpability for hard because although the woman intentionally and knowingly prompted Jean's death, she had the ideal to act around deadly force around self-defense since the girl's belief that unsafe force was straight away necessary was reasonable in the circumstances, " Guyger's attorneys said while in the appeal.
