The star, who&#65533;s also a producer of the blockbuster franchise, threatened to fire anyone not following the guidelines, according to the recording published on The Sun. Cruise was reportedly upset to see people standing too close together. Variety confirmed the incident.

&#65533;If I see you do it again you&#65533;re f gone, &#65533; Cruise can be heard saying. &#65533;We are the gold standard. They&#65533;re back there in Hollywood making movies right now because of us. Because they believe in us and what we&#65533;re doing. I&#65533;m on the phone with every f studio at night, insurance companies, producers and they&#65533;re looking at us and using us to make their movies. We are creating thousands of jobs, you motherf*. I don&#65533;t ever want to see it again. Ever! &#65533;

His said he didn&#65533;t want the movie to be shut down. Mission: Impossible 7 was one of the films to halt production early in the year, because of the epidemic.

Cruise insisted that there be no apologies: &#65533;You can tell it to the people that are losing their f homes because our industry is shut down. It&#65533;s not going to put food on their table or pay for their college education. That&#65533;s what I sleep with every night &#65533; the future of this f industry! So I&#65533;m sorry, I am beyond your apologies. I have told you, and now I want it, and if you don&#65533;t do it, you&#65533;re out. We are not shutting this f movie down! Is it understood? If I see it again, you&#65533;re f gone. &#65533;

Yahoo Entertainment has reached out to Cruise&#65533;s rep for comment.

Social media quickly reacted to the audio, with many people saying how glad they were to see Cruise taking the pandemic seriously. They also compared him to Les Grossman, the bullying Hollywood agent that Cruise played in Tropic Thunder, and several people noted the allegations against Scientology, of which Cruise is its most high-profile member.
